(July 20, 2018; 2:00 p.m.) 1 2 3 PROCEEDINGS 4 We are here today for oral argument in 5 THE CLERK: case 3:17-cv-2064-MO, Choi v. Reed Institute, et al. 6 7 Counsel, please state your name for the record. MS. NANAU: This is Daniela Nanau for the plaintiff, 8 9 Andrew Choi. MR. BRAGUE: Kevin Brague on behalf of plaintiff, 10 11 Andrew Choi. 12 MS. RUNKLES-PEARSON: PK Runkles-Pearson on behalf of 13 Professor Mariela Szwarcberg Daby. MS. BARRAN: Paula Barran on behalf of the Reed 14 15 Institute. THE COURT: Thank you all for being here. 16 17 I'd like to take these sort of thematically. So we'll 18 start with claim 1 and 2 under Title 11 on the statue of limitations issue, and I'll start each time with the moving 19 20 party. 21 Thank you, Your Honor. MS. BARRAN: 22 On the statute of limitations issue, there are some 23 things that we know from the complaint and that we know as a 24 matter of law. I don't think that there is any objection from 25 the plaintiff to our argument that this is a two-year statute.

The case law is clear. And as I read plaintiff's papers, they concede that it is a two-year statute of limitations.

THE COURT: Right. You're just facing a tolling argument. That's not a --

MS. BARRAN: Yes.

MS. NANAU: Your Honor, I hate to interrupt already, but I can barely hear Ms. Barran. Could she maybe speak into a microphone or something so that I can --

THE COURT: You can go ahead and be seated. That will help.

MS. BARRAN: Thank you, Your Honor. It's just a little uncomfortable sitting down in front of a judge during argument.

Thank you.

THE COURT: So we were just saying the parties seem to agree that there's a two-year statute of limitations, and so I've directed Ms. Barran to just pick up the tolling argument made by plaintiff.

Go ahead.

MS. BARRAN: So, Your Honor, the case law on equitable tolling in this district and in this circuit is very clear. First, it has to be an extreme case. Plaintiff asserts that everything that is necessary to identify a tolling issue is already in the complaint, but remarkably asks for discovery to see whether or not there is anything to support the tolling argument.

So assuming that the statements in the complaint are intended to assert the tolling facts, first, we have to find something that is extraordinary that makes this an extreme case. That's entirely missing from this -- from the allegations of this case.

Second, plaintiff has to establish that he was prevented by Reed, in our case, by the Reed Institute, from asserting a timely claim.

Plaintiff argues that in the opposition citing the Willamette Tree case, EEOC v. Willamette Tree, and the facts of that case are so inapposite that it's surprising that it even shows up in plaintiff's argument. In Willamette Tree, the woman who was an employee, who was a non-English speaker, had been repeatedly raped by her supervisor, and was told that if she told anybody about the rape he would kill her and kill her family and kill her children. If she quit her job, he would find her and harm her.

Those are the kinds of things that certainly would keep somebody from bringing a timely claim. That's entirely missing here.

In fact, if you look at the plaintiff's letter arguments, he attaches to his complaint a letter that he wrote to a group called CAT, which is the Committee on Advancement and Tenure at Reed. This was his 2015 complaint to Reed, or his 2015 letter to Reed, on the subject of whether or not Professor Daby should get a contract renewal, and in it he says straight out that you may wonder why I never brought this up before. And he gives two reasons; the first being that he was focused on his unwavering loyalty to Professor Daby, and the second being he was afraid of that jeopardizing his future academically.

That may have been a factor at some point during his school years, but he had flunked out of Reed in January 2014 and it took him close to four years to file this lawsuit.

So the focus for the Court is was there something that Reed did that kept him from filing a timely lawsuit? And he doesn't assert anything. He simply admits that he was loyal to his former professor and that he didn't want to jeopardize his academic career. His academic career was over when he flunked out of Reed.

He doesn't really say that he didn't file the lawsuit. What he says is it took him until 2015 to write a letter to Reed. That's not the kind of conduct that this extraordinary remedy or this extraordinary procedure of equitable tolling was intended to cover.

The other cases that plaintiff cites in his memorandum are similarly inapposite. One of them, the Alvarez case, was a gentleman who actually had been imprisoned and tortured in a foreign country, obviously he was being held incommunicado, and he couldn't file his lawsuit timely either.

Other cases that they cite are a collection of things where the government gave the wrong advice to a plaintiff, was late in getting the right to sue later, which was a prerequisite to filing suit. None of this is present here.

In fact, the plaintiff has not presented anything that explains this extraordinary long period of time beyond the running of the statute of limitations, almost two years after the statute had expired.

The plaintiff also has to present evidence that it was impossible for him to have filed his lawsuit on time, and that's entirely missing as well. He was able to write a letter to his professors, he was able to ask for an opportunity to come back to Reed, he was able to write a long letter to the Committee on Advancement and Tenure, which you see attached to the complaint. He could certainly have filed a lawsuit.

Similarly, another requirement for equitable tolling is that he have -- he preceded with due diligence to preserve his rights, and there's no evidence in the complaint or anywhere that he did that.

He wrote his letter to the committee in October of 2015. There's no indication of what was going on in the long period of time from his flunking out of Reed to writing that letter. And then as you can see from the dates on that exhibit, he waited a whole month before he even posted it to Reed, and then he waited another two years before he wrote another letter.

So from that, you have to wonder why equitable tolling has even been mentioned.

Plaintiff argues, then, that what the Court should do is take the period between his two letters -- he wrote a letter in October 2015 and then there was a contact -- I'm sorry. The letter and the contact.

So he wrote the one letter to the committee,

October 2015, and then the dean contacted him, June 2017, when

Professor Daby was standing for tenure, and plaintiff suggests that you simply take that time out of the equation and treat that as the tolling period. There's no law cited for that suggestion.

But even if you do the math, he still runs well outside of the statute of limitations. If you -- I actually calculated the days this morning, and he's still a number of days, like 86 days too late in filing the lawsuit, even if you give him what he asks for which is to toll that period between the two letters.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

Your response?

MS. NANAU: Plaintiff's response, Your Honor, is that Defendant Reed College is not giving due credence to the facts alleged which do allege an extraordinary situation.

Mr. Choi went through four years of Reed College, which were by and large successful until the last year. And then he encountered a series of problems, most of them having to do with the failure of his thesis -- of his thesis advisor,

Defendant Szwarcberg Daby, to shepherd him through the thesis process, and the reasons why that occurred are at issue in this lawsuit.

THE COURT: Those facts don't help me with the statute of limitations argument. Stick with what will help me decide whether there was tolling here.

MS. NANAU: Okay. Well, then let me just focus on this.

When Mr. Choi's first manuscript of his thesis, which had been approved, was then immediately -- the approval was revoked when he couldn't attend his oral examination because of a medical emergency, he requested a series of accommodations that were never -- that were never granted and, in fact, the process of requesting the accommodations --

THE COURT: Ms. Nanau, yet again you're telling me things that don't help me at all on the tolling argument.

When do you believe the claim first accrued?

MS. NANAU: I think the claim first accrued when Reed College denied his requests for accommodation.

THE COURT: All right. And then what are you relying on for tolling over the next ensuing more than four years?

MS. NANAU: The plaintiff provided Reed College with notice of both the failure of Defendant Szwarcberg Daby to accommodate him, and of their very problematic personal relationship that affected the thesis process in 2015. He did so at the behest of two professors, one of whom was chair of the department at that time. Because Reed College doesn't adhere to its own policies or procedures, as this case will amply demonstrate if we're allowed to move forward with discovery --

THE COURT: Let me ask you this. What's the dominant fact you rely on that shows Reed College did something to prevent the filing of this lawsuit?

MS. NANAU: I think -- I think it's very difficult, Your Honor, to slice and dice the evidence and give you an answer unless I can draw your attention to the process at the end of his tenure at Reed College.

When he tried to follow the procedures for requesting accommodation, and every time he followed the college's own directives from specific individuals, he was met with roadblocks by other individuals in the college, namely professors who didn't follow those procedures. And so when two professors came to him and suggested that this entire situation could be remedied if he explicitly told the committee on tenure what was going on, then he followed that directive because he believed this was the only opportunity for him to provide the college with all of the information that it required so that his situation with the college, vis-à-vis his degree, could be reconsidered.

He followed their directives. They waited two years to get back to him, and so equitable tolling is appropriate here because of that.

And there's no -- there's no prejudice to Reed College because they've had notice of this, this complaint, within the statutory time -- within statutory time period, and they waited until the statute of limitations ran out before they acknowledged this complaint and asked for more information.

These are extraordinary circumstances, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Thank you very much, Ms. Nanau. I disagree. I don't find extraordinary circumstances. I don't find anything in the facts of this case that remotely satisfies the requirements for tolling.

I dismiss claims 1 and 2 with prejudice for -- based on the fact that the statute of limitations has expired.

Let's pick up claim 3 on breach of contract, and that meaning the breach of contract claim against Reed.

I'll again turn to the moving party.

MS. BARRAN: Thank you, Your Honor.

The contract claim statute of limitations is of course longer; it's a six-year statute in Oregon. This is basically a failure to state a claim and failure to plead appropriately.

On the contract claim, there are several elements that need to show up in the pleading, the first of -- one of -- the first of which is an identification of what contract was breached. And in this pleading, plaintiff provides a laundry list of basically all school policies and procedures, asserts that they're contractual, and then says that they were breached in some sort of global way. There's no real identification of which policy the plaintiff is talking about.

And secondarily, also missing from that complaint is any indication from the plaintiff that he complied with his side of the bargain.

So assuming that these policies are contractual, the question is did he properly plead a contract claim? And our request is that the Court dismiss the contract claim because he did not.

We know specifically, taking the second one first, that he has not met his end of the bargain because he failed his thesis, he failed to produce a document that was appropriate. His academic problems were not caused by Reed. He admits in his papers that he lost his thesis document because of his own negligence and carelessness.

He was given an opportunity to provide a substandard draft and defend it. He didn't show up for his defense. He was given a further extension of approximately one month, and he failed to turn in that document on time.

THE COURT: You don't have to show his own breach.

You're just saying that the pleadings in the case don't allege his own full performance and his own lack of breach; right?

MS. BARRAN: Correct.

2.1

THE COURT: That's the principal pleading failure you're relying on here today?

MS. BARRAN: That, plus the failure to identify just what policy requirements that are alleged to have been breached. For example --

THE COURT: He identified policies. You're saying he just didn't identify which policy within the broad policy, which sub-policy is in play?

MS. BARRAN: Correct. Reed has many, many policies, and they're all listed, but there isn't an indication of what was breached. And I'll give you an example, Your Honor, that I think illustrates this.

There is a complaint that you see mentioned two or three times in the course of the pleading that says the sign-off of his thesis document from December 2013 was revoked with his -- without his ever having been given a reason for revoking it contrary to the policies. I am clueless about what policies require Reed to give a student some sort of information, the reason for revoking a sign-off on a thesis that everybody agrees was substandard. So I don't know what these policies are.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

And your response on breach of contract?

MS. NANAU: Your Honor, this is a motion to dismiss and the standard is whether there are sufficient facts that have been pled to make out a cognizable legal claim.

The plaintiff has alleged several specific college policies that were breached; among them, the college's policy that forbids plagiarism, the college policy that prohibits sexual relations between professors and students, and college policies regarding the thesis process. There is nothing in those policies that permitted Reed to revoke the thesis approval and require Andrew to submit a second manuscript. There is nothing in those policies that permitted Reed to ignore his complaint.

And the written complaint in 2015 was not the first complaint that he made about Professor Szwarcberg Daby and her inappropriate treatment of him.

THE COURT: Let's turn to the other argument, then, the failure of plaintiff to plead his own full performance in lack of breach. Do you have that in the complaint now?

MS. NANAU: Yes, it is in the complaint, Your Honor.

And if you permit me a moment, I can read you the specific paragraphs in the complaint -- I was just looking over it -- but it's going to take a moment for me to get there.

THE COURT: Go ahead.

MS. NANAU: Sorry, Your Honor. I'm a little nervous and I'm not finding it.

The gist of what we said is that there were all of these policies that bound Reed but also bound Andrew.

THE COURT: What were the obligations your client undertook as part of this contract? What did the contract obligate your client to do?

MS. NANAU: To satisfactorily complete his course of study, to abide by the rules that were promulgated by the college that pertained to students, and he fulfilled all of those obligations to graduate but for the breaches that are at issue in this case that -- that were -- sorry -- that were -- the breaches of policies that Reed engaged in and Professor Daby.

THE COURT: But you're unable to tell me where in the contract this is alleged; in other words, here are the obligations I undertook and I did them all?

MS. NANAU: Your Honor, there is language in the pleading that states what Choi's obligations were to the college pursuant to its own policies. And there is an allegation in the pleading, but I'm sorry, I cannot find right this second, that says he alleges that he complied with all of those obligations.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you very much.

Do you wish to reply, Ms. Barran?

MS. BARRAN: Just a few things, Your Honor.

Specifically in the complaint, plaintiff concedes that he failed his thesis. But even setting the thesis aside, you see allegations in the complaint that he failed to complete a senior level political science course for Professor Gronke.

THE COURT: How do I know that's a term of the contract incumbent on plaintiff that he failed to perform?

MS. BARRAN: Because the plaintiff says that he had academic responsibilities and that they were part of his completion of the coursework, and that's what Ms. Nanau just argued. So we know that he didn't turn in his thesis, we know that the thesis was required, we know that he failed to turn in an examination, and he failed to turn in his political science homework.

We also know from his letter to the two professors that he -- and he confesses that he responded to their assistance with dishonesty and a failure to be truthful with them.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

I dismiss the breach of contract claim without prejudice. Here's what I think is missing, and plaintiff has two weeks to amend.

First, the amended pleading should set forth with specificity what the terms are of the contract that impose any obligation on plaintiff. That's the nature of a contract, of course, that they have mutual obligations. So we should be able to tell readily from the complaint what the terms are in the contract that imposed some obligation of performance on plaintiff.

And then assuming he can do so, the contract has to allege that -- he has to plead his own full performance and lack of breach.

That's the first thing that has to be amended. And it's not -- it may be discernable in some rough way by parsing the pleadings now, although I don't think so, but it's not the least bit clear that that's the case.

Second, the plaintiff needs to identify when he alleges a breach by Reed, what provision of the contract is being breached. That's because the plaintiff has alleged a far-flung set of documents as the contract, and it's -- while it's not necessary to be line by line specific, one should be able to read the complaint and tell what term of the contract is being breached when one alleges a breach by Reed.

So if, for example, withdrawing approval is a breach of the contract, then somewhere nearby when that breach is alleged one should be able to tell what provision of the contract is being breached.

So I dismiss claim 3 without prejudice to amend in two weeks' time.

Claim 4 is negligent retention and supervision.

Again, I'll turn to the moving party.

MS. BARRAN: That's also a claim by Reed and it is a claim against Reed.

There are two potential aspects to this, and I think it's a little unclear in the complaint just how plaintiff intended to structure this.

If plaintiff intends to say that there was negligence in Reed up until the time that he failed and left the school in January 24 [sic], then the timeliness arguments that we made with respect to the first two claims apply here just as well.

As I understand the plaintiff's arguments, the negligence claim is that, in 2015, the plaintiff sent a letter to Reed complaining about those older events -- and the dean was carbon copied on it, it wasn't directed to him -- and that the dean was either not trained, with no detail, or unfairly or improperly supervised with no detail and did nothing about the letter, and, therefore, the plaintiff can't argue about what happened to him at Reed up until 2014 by sending a letter in 2015 that wasn't acted on.

So assuming that that -- that I have the theory correct, the events up until the time the plaintiff left Reed are clearly untimely. It's a two-year statute of limitations.

If this is intended to be a claim for negligent retention or negligent supervision, it's a state law claim with very specific requirements. The plaintiff has to identify foreseeable risk of harm, that he's part of the persons intended to be protected by that. He has to show that there were known dangerous propensities by the employee -- in this case, the dean -- that they were foreseeable and that he could foreseeably have harmed the plaintiff and the plaintiff was injured because of that. None of that is present in this.

THE COURT: Can you pull the microphone closer to you.

MS. BARRAN: None of that is present in this complaint, Your Honor. They say nothing about the dean other than his name, he was carbon-copied on a letter, and then this negligence claim flows.

What really is apparent here is an attempt to dress up the old claim to see if they can escape the statute of limitations, and for those reasons we would move to dismiss this claim.

THE COURT: Are you making any argument about special relationship, or not?

MS. BARRAN: We have cited cases about the lack of a special relationship. So we are, Your Honor. There isn't any recognition in this court as we sit here today that there's a special relationship between this -- between this student and between Reed College.

In this particular case, there clearly wouldn't be one, even leaving aside whether or not the Court would recognize one when he was a student. Remember that this letter was written in 2015, at the end of 2015, October, written in October, sent in November 2015. He had not been a student at Reed since January 2014. So he was a person who was a former student for Reed.

Under those circumstances, if this Court hasn't clearly recognized a special relationship between a present student and the institution, it certainly, we submit, would not recognize a special relationship between a former student and that institution.

So we would --

THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

For plaintiff, if you'd first identify whether this claim is sort of a straight negligence claim for events that occurred during the time your client was a student, or, alternatively, a negligent retention claim for negligent retention and training of a dean in the time period after your client was no longer at Reed. Can you tell us which it is.

MS. NANAU: Sure, Your Honor. It's the latter. All of -- because this -- all of the events regarding Nigel Nicholson, who is the dean, and also the head of the committee on tenure and advancement at Reed, because he's the dean of the faculty, all of -- the claim is rooted in conduct that happened after Andrew was no longer matriculated as a student but still discussing a possible return to Reed. That's why he was still in connection with various professors who encouraged him to submit the complaint to the CAT.

THE COURT: So let's talk about just one element of what you'd have to plead for that sort of negligent retention claim, and that's the idea that since you're seeking only economic damages, not physical harm, that you'd have to plead a here we could do it.

special relationship between a former student and Reed College.

Can you do that? Did you do that? Is that even possible?

MS. NANAU: Well, Your Honor, I think the special relationship is a really fact-intensive inquiry, and I think

I think I've alleged sufficient facts that are very similar to the case of -- the Shin case, which involved a student in a prep school. That student was 17 years old, living at a boarding school, and the court found that there was a proper relationship between that school and the student.

Similarly, the relationship that Andrew has with Reed is informed by the special relationship that he had with them as a result of him being a student there as a very young person.

THE COURT: Thank you.

MS. NANAU: And if he -- if I could just add one thing, Your Honor.

He was complaining about something that required a response and there was no response for two years, and that's the root of the negligence claim here.

THE COURT: Thank you.

I don't get to make Oregon contract law. It has requirements in it, and one of them here is, because of the nature of the damages sought, that there be a special relationship in this -- between the parties here.

Of course there are a number of relationships that are accepted as special in case law or are obvious like attorney-client or doctor-patient. Among the possible special relationships, it's a little murky, and as counsel has suggested, it can be very fact-specific with regard to whether there's a school-student special relationship.

And I think that's certainly possible in the setting of an elementary or secondary school. There are many elements to that including, although it's not talked about this way as much, as sort of an in loco parentis idea, but also just the age and sort of shared child custody between parents and schools.

I think it, in my view, doubtful that one can successfully advance a special relationship theory between college students and their college or university since a lot has changed by then, including age, but also including their relationship to the age of majority and their parents and otherwise.

Even, however, if there were a special relationship between a college and a student, such as the college and the student in this case, or the dean and the student here, that wouldn't survive the end of the student-college or student-dean relationship. It wouldn't apply to a former or ex-student.

And it doesn't really matter that he or she might be contemplating returning. You can be in a special relationship and then out of one and then get back in one as, for example, when you have a lawyer and then you don't, and then you hire a lawyer. But that doesn't endure for the interregnum. And so that's missing here.

There are other things that are missing that are pleading problems, but this isn't a pleading problem and this one is insuperable, and, therefore, I dismiss this contract claim -- excuse me -- this negligent retention claim with prejudice.

I'll turn to the motion for summary judgment. We'll turn to claim 5, the breach of contract alleged in that claim. Start with the moving party.

MS. RUNKLES-PEARSON: Good afternoon, Your Honor.

The breach of contract here needs to fail. It's fairly obvious from the pleading and from the briefing back and forth that the contract that the plaintiff is alleging is contained in an offer letter offering a stipend over the summer called -- the so-called Corbett grant from Reed College to both Professor Szwarcberg Daby on the one hand and the plaintiff on the other hand.

These are two separate letters. I think there is a question as to whether there's a contract at all, but the Court doesn't need to decide that in order to decide this motion.

The plaintiff alleges that the breach of contract is that Professor Szwarcberg Daby failed to provide attribution to the plaintiff in three different works; one is her book, another is a presentation that she made to the American Political Science Association, and the third is in a book review that she wrote of another professor's work that was published in an academic journal.

The key issue here, Your Honor, is that there is nothing in the contract, if indeed it is a contract, that requires attribution by Professor Szwarcberg Daby. The contract doesn't include any term requiring acknowledgment whatsoever, and there's no term in it that might be ambiguous such that it would allow extrinsic evidence that the plaintiff is seeking to rely on in support of the response.

THE COURT: So your argument is that while the extrinsic evidence might point to an idea that attribution is something Reed College favors, that I should not turn to it unless there's ambiguity in the terms of the contract itself, and you contend there is no such ambiguity.

MS. RUNKLES-PEARSON: That's correct, Your Honor.

I have further evidence which has actually not yet been presented to the Court that I would like to present to the Court at this point if the Court would find it helpful.

Since the briefing closed on this case, we had the opportunity to take plaintiff's deposition, and his deposition testimony further supports our arguments in this matter.

THE COURT: I wouldn't do that if I thought the terms were ambiguous; right?

MS. RUNKLES-PEARSON: Correct, Your Honor. However, his deposition testimony does point out that he agrees that this is the contract, and he further acknowledges that there is no term in the contract that requires attribution.

THE COURT: The Corbett grant contract as alleged appears to me to be between Reed and the grantees; right?

MS. RUNKLES-PEARSON: I think that that's a flaw in the plaintiff's claim that we haven't addressed in this motion, Your Honor. The letter itself is a letter from Reed -- two letters. There's one from Reed to the plaintiff, and then there is one from Reed to Professor Szwarcberg Daby. We think that there is some oddness there that, should the Court allow this claim to go forward, we would address in a future fuller motion.

However, that's not the basis of this motion. The basis of this motion is that if there is a contract, it contains no term requiring attribution.

THE COURT: Thank you.

For plaintiff?

MS. NANAU: Your Honor, the Corbett grant was for collaborative work to be performed by Szwarcberg Daby and Choi. There was no requirement for attribution because it was expected because the work was collaborative in nature.

To accept defendant's arguments is to ignore the purpose of the grant in and of itself and to ignore the plain meaning of the word "collaborative" which means they did it together.

THE COURT: Your argument is that "collaborative" necessarily includes the concept of attribution?

MS. NANAU: Yes, Your Honor. Because if you're a co-author and you're collaborating on a scholarly work, you are entitled to attribution for your contributions to that work as a co-author. And that is -- and that is enforced by the policies of Reed College which should be informing the Court's view of this because the policies are essentially like course of dealing, and course of dealing is always taken into account when terms of the contract are ambiguous, as they are here.

THE COURT: And the word you find ambiguous is "collaborative"?

MS. NANAU: Well, no. I think "collaborative" -- the fact that this was a collaborative research project informs the parameters of the contract as it existed and what the obligations were. The ambiguity is in that there is a reference to attribution, but the reference to attribution is only limited to Reed College in the contract.

So it's not actually correct that there is no requirement for attribution. It only requires that the attribution go to Reed College for providing funds pursuant to the Corbett grant, which Defendant Szwarcberg Daby didn't do either.

THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

Ms. Runkles-Pearson, your argument depends on the idea that "collaborative" cannot be read to mean to include attribution; right?

MS. RUNKLES-PEARSON: I think that's correct, Your Honor. I think it needs to be read in the context of the rest of the provisions of the contract, which, as counsel pointed out, does include a statement specifically stating we would appreciate any papers or publications resulting from this work to include the foregoing or the following acknowledgement.
This research was supported by a Reed College collaborative research grant.

I don't think that there's anything about the word "collaborative" that requires attribution. I don't think that's an ambiguous term. Furthermore, we have the plaintiff's own testimony here that there's nothing in this --

THE COURT: Why would I rely on that unless I find the word to be ambiguous?

MS. RUNKLES-PEARSON: That is true, Your Honor. That's a backup argument, I suppose.

But I don't believe that the word "collaborative" is ambiguous in any way. It certainly, at its farthest reaches, implies that people work together; however, it does not imply in any way that attribution must be provided.

Furthermore, even if the term were found to be ambiguous, the surrounding information that we have here makes it fairly obvious what plaintiff and Professor Szwarcberg Daby anticipated. We've --

THE COURT: Surrounding information, you mean the textual information in the grant? Or the deposition testimony?

MS. RUNKLES-PEARSON: I think both make that clear,
Your Honor. I think you can look solely at the language of this contract and find that --

THE COURT: I'd look at the language in the contract, the other language in the contract, as phase 1 to decide if it's ambiguous. It's not a later phase. I don't just look at the word "ambiguous," I look at the entire contract. That's phase 1 of contract analysis; right?

MS. RUNKLES-PEARSON: That's correct, Your Honor. And I think as an initial matter, from the face of this contract alone, you can conclude that there's no term requiring attribution.

THE COURT: Thank you very much. I agree that the term at least as employed in this particular contract is not ambiguous and does not contain within it a requirement for attribution. That's a separate concept that would have to have been dealt with separately and isn't picked up by the concept of collaborative work. And I find that just by the nature of the term itself, but also by the term read in context of -- in context of the entire contract, and therefore I grant summary judgment as to claim 5 on the breach of contract for -- under my reading of the actual terms of the contract itself.

Claim 6 is as to conversion, and Mr. Choi has conceded that his conversion claim fails because an Oregon conversion claim cannot apply to theft of intellectual property and in any event would be preempted by copyright or patent law. So I dismiss claim 6 with prejudice.

In all of this, I've left one claim subject to amendment. I don't find any other amendment to be anything other than futile here.

Mr. Choi wants to amend to state a claim under the ADA and not Title 11 for disability discrimination, but that would have the same statute of limitation and equitable tolling issue, and wants to amend for declaratory relief against Ms. Szwarcberg Daby in a variety of ways that aren't really what is intended by the concept of declaratory relief. Instead, they are just concepts picked up by my other rulings already on the pleadings in this case.

So in two weeks we'll get an amendment on one of the claims, and that's the only claim that has a possibility of going forward, depending on how the amendment goes.

Thank you all. We'll be in recess.

(The proceedings concluded at 2:42 p.m.)
